AFCAT vs CDS: Which Defence Entry Is Right for You?

Vitol Growth

For thousands of young Indians who dream of serving the nation as commissioned officers, two of the most popular defence entry routes are the Air Force Common Admission Test (AFCAT) and the Combined Defence Services (CDS) Examination. Both examinations provide excellent opportunities to join the Indian Armed Forces, but they differ significantly in terms of eligibility, examination pattern, selection process, training, and career opportunities.

Many defence aspirants often find themselves confused about whether they should prepare for AFCAT, CDS, or both. Choosing the right path depends on your career goals, educational background, interests, and long-term aspirations.

Students preparing through the best AFCAT coaching in Kerala often receive proper career guidance that helps them understand the differences between AFCAT and CDS and make informed decisions about their defence careers.

This comprehensive guide compares AFCAT and CDS in detail to help you determine which defence entry route is best suited for you.

Understanding AFCAT

The Air Force Common Admission Test (AFCAT) is conducted by the Indian Air Force to recruit officers for:

- Flying Branch
- Ground Duty (Technical) Branch
- Ground Duty (Non-Technical) Branch

AFCAT provides direct entry into the Indian Air Force and is one of the fastest-growing defence examinations in India.

Understanding CDS

The Combined Defence Services (CDS) Examination is conducted by the Union Public Service Commission (UPSC).

Through CDS, candidates can join:

- Indian Military Academy (Army)
- Indian Naval Academy (Navy)
- Air Force Academy (Air Force)
- Officers Training Academy (OTA)

CDS offers broader opportunities across all three services.
