Enemy Property Act, 1968: A Comprehensive Overview

Introduction

The Enemy Property Act, 1968, is a key legislation in India that governs properties belonging to enemies of the state. This law was enacted during a turbulent period in Indian history following wars with Pakistan and China. It empowers the government to take control of properties left behind by nationals of enemy countries.

Historical Background

1. Partition and Wars:

- After the partition of India in 1947, many properties were left behind by those who migrated to Pakistan.
- The wars with China (1962) and Pakistan (1965, 1971) further escalated the issue, as individuals from these countries who owned property in India were classified as "enemies."

2. Defense of India Rules, 1962:

- The initial provision to deal with enemy property was under the Defense of India Rules, 1962. It empowered the government to take over properties of enemies during the Sino-Indian war.

3. Enactment of the Act:

- The Enemy Property Act was introduced in 1968 to formalize the process of managing and disposing of these properties.

Key Provisions of the Enemy Property Act, 1968

1. Definition of Enemy:

- An "enemy" is defined as a person or country against which India has declared war. This includes citizens of Pakistan and China.

2. Enemy Property:

- Refers to properties left behind by enemies, including immovable properties (land, buildings) and movable properties (shares, securities).

3. Custodian of Enemy Property:

- A government-appointed authority, Custodian of Enemy Property for India (CEPI), is responsible for managing enemy properties.

4. Bar on Claims:

- No individual can claim ownership of enemy properties unless explicitly permitted by the Central Government.

5. Prohibition on Transfer:

- Enemy properties cannot be transferred, sold, or inherited without government approval.

Amendments to the Act

The Enemy Property (Amendment and Validation) Act, 2017 brought significant changes to strengthen the law. Key features include:

- 1. Reaffirmation of Ownership:
 - The ownership of enemy properties lies solely with the government. Claims of inheritance by successors were invalidated.
- 2. Extension of Definition:
 - Legal heirs of enemy nationals, even if they are Indian citizens or neutral country nationals, cannot claim the properties.
- 3. Retrospective Application:
 - The amendment applies retrospectively from 1968, closing loopholes that allowed litigation.
- 4. Increased Powers of Custodian:
 - The Custodian can now sell enemy properties with the government's approval, enabling efficient disposal of such assets.

Significance of the Act

- 1. National Security:
 - Ensures that properties of hostile entities are not used against the state.
- 2. Economic Impact:
 - Revenue generated from the sale of enemy properties can contribute to national development.
- 3. Legal Clarity:
 - The amendments provide clarity and prevent misuse of legal provisions by individuals claiming rights over enemy properties.

Criticism and Challenges

- 1. Inheritance Issues:
 - The law has been criticized for denying rightful inheritance to descendants of enemy nationals who are Indian citizens.
- 2. Judicial Backlog:
 - A large number of cases are pending in courts, delaying the resolution of disputes.
- 3. Arbitrary Powers:
 - Critics argue that the Custodian has excessive powers, leading to potential misuse.
- 4. Diplomatic Concerns:
 - The Act may strain relations with countries like Pakistan and China, as it directly affects their nationals and descendants.

Current Status

As of now, India has approximately 9,406 enemy properties (valued at over ₹1 lakh crore), primarily left behind by Pakistani nationals. Uttar Pradesh, West Bengal, and Delhi have the largest share of these properties. The government has initiated steps to monetize these assets by selling them to private entities.
